Work in the Case Is of the Greatest Value.

THORN CONFIDENT HE WILL BE ACQUITTED.

As Martin Thorn rose with Captain Methven at 5 o'clock to go back to his cell, after the choosing of the last juror, he said, with an air of great relief: "Thank God, that's so much less time for me to wait. I was told it would take a week to get the jury. I'll bet you that I'm out of here in a week."

MRS. NACK FIRST GLAD, THEN DESPONDENT.

Mrs. Nack had two visits yesterday from her lawyer, "Manny" Friend. At the first, at noontime, she was in high spirits, and said on being told that two jurors had been secured: "Oh, I'm so glad they are hurrying. It means I get out so much quicker." At the second visit Mrs. Nack had fallen into a very nervous condition and even the news that the jury box was full failed to rouse her. She would not say what had caused the change and only demanded peevishly, to be let alone.

First Talesman Called Causes a Sensation, and May Be a Witness.

Indicted Slayer of William Guldensuppe Sits
Through the Day with Eyes
Straight Ahead.

The trial of Martin Thorn for the murder of William Guldensuppe began yesterday. A single day sufficed for the empanelling of the jury, which was a surprise, as the lawyers expected it would take a week or two because of the tremendous publicity the story of the crime was given. The case began dramatically. The first talesman that came to the stand to answer questions proved to be a new witness to strong facts against the prisoner. This talesman was L. O. Blomqvist, and his story is published in the Journal to-day for the first time. He is a painter, and lives near the Woodside cottage where Guldensuppe is supposed to have been murdered.

On Saturday, June 26, Blomqvist saw standing before the cottage the surrey that played so important a part in the story of the crime. More than this, he saw at the cottage Mrs. Nack and Martin Thorn, and late in the evening of that day he saw behind the surrey a grewsome bundle, through the torn end of which he saw flesh and bones. He thought it was a fresh killed pig, and spoke of it to his assistant and to others at the time. The prosecution would never have heard of Blomqvist had it not been for the accident of his being called as a juror. His full story is told elsewhere in the Journal.
